

Ashley Heaslip, M.D., M.P.H., B.A., is a doctoral student in the Interdisciplinary Graduate Studies Program at the University of British Columbia as well as a family medicine resident at St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver, BC. Her research takes place at the intersection between public health and sociology and examines concepts of intimacy and sexuality within various health care settings, including residential care and hospice. Her research is supported by a Vanier Canada Graduate Scholarship through the Canadian Institutes of Health Research (CIHR). Ashley has clinical interests in elder care, sexual medicine and palliative care. Prior to joining UBC, Ashley completed her medical doctorate (M.D.) at McMaster University and her Masters of Public Health at the University of Toronto.
