

NAVIGATING PUBLIC TRANSPORT

Evidence informed advice

Transit authorities are protecting passengers through enhanced surface cleaning and limiting the number of riders.

When planning your trip be aware that routes may have been modified. Allow extra time for travel. Transit may be less frequent than usual or you may decide to switch vehicles because of crowding.

Travel outside of peak periods whenever possible. Take advantage of flexible hours.

When waiting for, entering, traveling on and exiting transit stay more than 6ft/2m from other passengers and the driver. If the bus/train is so full that you can't maintain this distance, consider waiting for the next vehicle or wear a non-medical mask.

When buying a ticket, know that the buttons your fingers touch may be contaminated. Where possible, avoid touching any surface. If you do touch poles, straps, doors, etc., wash your hands or use hand sanitizer before eating or touching your face.

Remain further than 6ft/2m away from someone who coughs or sneezes because their droplets travel further. If they look sick, consider waiting for the next bus.

Do NOT use public transport if you have symptoms of or have been told by a doctor that you have COVID-19, or if you live with someone who has COVID-19.
